AUTOMOBILE SPEECH

Railroad Buying is Predicted in the Near Future

Boards of carmen from various sections of the country are asking steel mills to make reservations on their metal schedules of heavy tonnage of steel material used in construction.

This fact would appear to indicate the intention of important car buyers by railroads. This seems further corroborated by the earnest thought being given to the likelihood of a serious car shortage this fall.

A SMART COAT FOR THE FIRST COLD FALL DAY

At the Theatres

SOISSON THEATRE

"PRIDE, GARTH OF A VIKING" one of the most sensational plays of the day, "The Orth of a Viking" will be presented at the Soisson Theatre today. Valda, the daughter of the Viking king of Norway, is involved in a two-acter who practices many daring deeds in the air for her hand, even to shooting a thrilling duel. Grace Thompson and Hobart Henley are joint stars in the two-acter, Res, drama, "The Man in the Cloth." It is a decidedly interesting story of a man charged with murder, which he really did, but was acquitted. The comedy is plentiful too. The Soisson company, Leo Adams Smith, stars in the farce comedy, "When Helen Went to the City," which is filled with uproarious laughter, and lots of enough fun to last a week. Tomorrow, the twelfth episode of the famous serial, "The Diamond from the Sky" will be the attraction. At the close of this play only two serials will be run at the Soisson.

PH. GLOBE

"THE GODDESSES" —The 4th chapter of "The Goddesses," the beautiful serial production featuring Anita Stewart and Eddie William screen薄 will be shown today. In addition to several other exceptionally interesting attractions, as the story of "The Goddesses" winds its way toward the finishing chapter, it continues to grow more interesting and the many followers of the serial are eager to learn what the final outcome of the story will reveal. "Under Two Flags" a Biograph drama in the style of "Under Two Flags" and "Under Two Flags" a Kalem drama with Al J. Lovell in the leading role are included in the program. Tomorrow and Friday night, the automobile races in Philmont, the old pigeon show at Killenholly Park and at Mayor McRae's farm and other local pictures will be shown.

Suddenly a new thought struck her, and it brought from her a sudden question. "But you know who the murderer is, and you have spared him?"

The man laughed. "Don't fret yourself, ma'm. The man that killed Fletch has left the mountains, an' right now he's out of reach. But he'll be back some day, an' when he comes I reckon the first news you'll hear of him will be that he's dead." Once more it was the implacable avenger that spoke.

The girl could only murmur in perplexity: "You have kept Job in ignorance. I don't understand."

"I've got other plans for Job," said Bad Anse Hayey. "I don't know how to let him be a killer. There's others that can attend to that."

He flung the door open and called Job, and a moment later the boy, black and the sunset glamed at his back. Juanita never knew what details of the incident came to Old Milt's ears, but when next the head of the house passed her on the road he spoke with a diminished cordiality, and when she stopped him he commented: "I hear you're a-cummin' Harvey school over there now. Little Milt tells me yo' warned him off yo' place."

She tried to explain, and though he pretended to accept all she said in good humor, she knew in her heart she had made a powerful and bitter enemy.

One afternoon Anse Harvey, wandering through the timber on his own side of the ridge, came upon a lone hunter, and when he drew near it proved to be young Milt McBrillar. "Morning, Milt," said Harvey. "I didn't know ye ever went huntin' over here."

The boy, who in fact etiquette was a trespasser, met the scrutiny with a level glance.

"Yes, I was a-cummin' for boomers," he said, using the local phrase for squatters of the hills. "I reckon I hadn't hardly got no license to go gunnin' on yo're land."

Anse Harvey sat down on a log and looked up at the boy sternly. At last he said gravely:

"Hunt as much as ye like, Milt, only be heedful not to start no fires."

Milt nodded and turned to go, but the older man called him back.

"I want to have a word with ye, Milt," he said soberly. "I ain't never heard that neither the McBrillars nor the Harvey's countenanced settin' fire to dwellin' houses, have you?"

"I don't feel that changes must come," she questioned a little timidly. "They have come everywhere else."

"They will come." His voice again rose vehemently. "But they'll be made my way—our way, not yours. Those hills shan't always be a reproach to the state of Kentucky. They're goin' to be my pride some day."

"That's all!" exclaimed the girl, flinging at him a glance of absolute admiration. "I don't care who does it, so long as it's done right. You've got to see sooner or later that we're workin' to the same end. You may not be my friend, but I'm goin' to be yours."

"I'm obliged to ye." He spoke gravely and, turning on his heel left the room by the back door.

As chance would have it, Young Milt rode by her place the next day. She knew he would come back the same way, and that afternoon, as he was returning, she intercepted him beyond the turn of the road. With the foreign courtesy learned abroad, he lifted his hat and dismounted.

Juanita had always rather liked Young Milt. The clear fearlessness of his eyes gave him a certain attractiveness, and his face had so far escaped the clouding veil of dullness which she so often saw.

At first she was a little confused as to how to approach the subject, and the boy rolled a cigarette as he stood respectfully waiting.

"Milt," she said at last, "please don't misunderstand me. It's not because I want to, but I've got to ask you to give me a promise. You see, I need your help."

At that the half smile left the boy's lips and a half frown came to his eyes. "I reckon I know what yo' mean," he said. "Young Job, he's hard to ter warn man off. Why don't Job carry his own messages?"

"Milt," she gravely reminded him, resting her hand for a moment on his coat sleeve, "I'm more serious than that. Job ordered me to send his sister back to the cabin. I am havin' an education. I want her to have one. She has the right to it. I love her very dearly, Milt, and if you are a friend you won't rob her of her chance."

The boy's eyes flashed. "An' yo' goin' ter send her back ter dwon' amongst them razorback hawks an' houn' dawgs an' fleas?" he demanded sputteringly.

"That depends on you. Job is the head of his family. I can't keep her, without his consent. I find to promise him that you shouldn't visit her."

For a moment the boy to the McBrillar leader stood twisting the toe of his heavy boot in the dust and apparently contemplating the little ring it stamped out. Then he raised his eyes and contemplatively studied the crease of ridges softening with the coming of sunset.

At last he inquired, "What has Dawn got ter say?"

"Dawn hasn't said much," Juanita faltered, remembering the girl's tirade, then she confessed: "You see, Milt, just now Dawn is thinkin' of herself as a Harvey and of you as a McBrillar. All I ask is that you won't try to see her while she's here at the school—not at all events, until things are different."

The boy was wrestling with youth's unwillingness to be coerced.

"An' let Dawn think that her brother skeered me off?" he questioned last with a note of rising defiance.

"Dawn shan't think that. She shall know that you have acted with a gentleman's generosity, Milt—and because I've asked you to do it."

"Hain't I good enough ter keep company with Fletch McNaugh's gal?" The lad was already persuaded, but his stubbornness fired this parting shot.

"It's not a question of that, Milt, and you know it," declared Juanita. "It's just that one of your people killed one of his. Put yourself in Job's place."

Still for a while the boy stood there scowling down at the ground, but at last he raised his face and nodded. "I'll give yo' my hand."

"It's a bargain, ma'am, but mind I only say I won't see her bar. Some day I'll make Job pay for it."

He mounted and rode away while theazy, hairy sweetness of the smoky mists hung splendidly to the ridges and the sunset glamed at his back. Juanita never knew what details of the incident came to Old Milt's ears, but when next the head of the house passed her on the road he spoke with a diminished cordiality, and when she stopped him he commented: "I hear you're a-cummin' Harvey school over there now. Little Milt tells me yo' warned him off yo' place."

This incident had for a long time been vaguely taking shape in his mind, and when he met Young Milt in the woods and proposed uniting to save Juanita's school he was laying the cornerstone for that future alliance.

At sunset Young Milt came, and he came without having spoken of his purpose at home. The night was sharp and moonless, with no light save that which came from the coldly glittering stars, and Anse and Young Milt crouched for hours, knee to knee in the dark thicket, keeping watch.

At last they both saw a creeping figure which was only a vague shadow moving among shadows, and they peered with straining eyes and raised rifles. But the shadow fell very still, and since it was only by its movement that they could detect it, they waited in vain.

What hint of being watched was given out no one could say. The woods were quiet, and the two kneeling figures in the laurel made no sound. The other men, waiting at their separated posts, were equally invisible and noiseless, but some intangible premonition had come to the shadow which had lost itself in the impenetrable blackness and began its retreat with its object unaccomplished.

Young Milt went back to his house in the cold mists of dawn. No shot had been fired, no face recognized, but the Harvey and the McBrillar both knew that the school had been saved by their joint vigilance.

"But why?" she inquired in perplexity.

"I reckon it sounds kinder rough an' ignorant to ye, this mountain speech. Well, to me it's music. It's the language of my own people an' my own bibles. I loves it. It don't make no difference to me that it's bad grammar. Birds don't sing so sweet when yo' teachem' new tunes. To my ears the talk of down below is bard an' unnatural. I don't like the ways nor the speech of this flat country. I'll have none of it. Besides, I belongs here, an' if I didn't talk like they do my people wouldn't trust me." He paused a moment, then added: "I'd hate to have my people not trust me. So if yo' don't mind, I reckon I'll go on talkin' an' I learnt to talk."

She nodded her head. "I see," she said quickly.

"What do ye aim to call this school?" he asked suddenly.

"Why, I thought I'd call it the Holland school," she answered, and when he shook his head and said "Don't do it," she colored.

"I didn't mean to name it for my self, of course," she explained. "I wanted to call it after my grandfather. He always wanted to do something for education here in the Kentucky hills."

"I didn't mean to find no fault with the name of Holland," he told her gravely. "That's a good name as any. Just don't call it a school. Call it a college."

"But," she demurred, "it's not going to be a college. It's just a school."

Again the boyish smile came to his face and seemed to erase ten years from his age. His manner of speech made her feel that they were sharing a secret.

"Can you not find it in your heart to be touched by devotion? Not only happiness, but peace, wills when you are, and I am coming to you."

"Do not forbid me, for I am coming anyway. I am coming because I must; because I love you."

She sat for a long time gazing off at the distances and shivered a little in the bite of the raw air. Then she looked up and saw a figure at her side. It was Bad Anse Harvey.

He bowed and stripped off his coat, which, without asking permission, he threw around her shivering shoulders.

"I didn't aim to intrude on ye," he said slowly. "I didn't know yo' was up here. Do yo' come often?"

"Very often," he answered, folding the letter and putting it back into its envelope. "When I first came to the Widow Everson's I discovered this tree, and it seemed to beckon to me to come up. Look!" She rose and pointed with a gauntleted hand. "I can stand here and see the fortifications of my two enemies. There is your place and there is Milt McBrillar's."

She smiled with unconscious archness. "But I'm not going to let you be my enemy any more," she went on.

"I've decided that you have got to be my friend, whether you want to or not—and what I decide upon must be."

Bad Anse Harvey stopped looking into her eyes with the disconcerting steadiness of gaze that she always found it difficult to sustain, but his only response was a sober "I'm obliged to you."

"I have behaved abominably to you, Mr. Harvey," she confessed. "It's natural that you should refuse me forgiveness."

"For a moment her eyes danced and she looked up, challengingly, into his face. "But it's natural, too, that I should refuse to let you refuse. We are going to be friends. I am going to smash your old feud to splinters and I'm going to beat you, and just the same we are going to be friends."

"Again like reply was brief, "I'm obliged to ye."

"You have been very good to me," she went on, and the note of banter left her voice; "and you refused to let me thank you."

For a moment he was silent, then he replied awkwardly: "I reckon it's pretty easy to be good to you." After that she heard him saying in a very soft voice:

"One of the first things I remember is being foched up here by mammy when I was a spindlin' little chap. She used to bring me up here and tell me Indian stories. Sometimes my pappy came with us, but mostly it was just my mammy an' me."

"Your father was a soldier, wasn't he?" she asked.

"Yes. He was a captain in Morgan's command. When the war ended he came back here an' reliased. I reckon I'd oughter be right smart ashamed of that, but somehow I tol'able proud of it. He loved that what was good enough for his folks was good enough for him—"

He broke off suddenly and a smile came to his face; a remarkably naive and winning smile, the girl thought.

Striking an attitude, he added in a tone of mock seriousness and perfect lowland English, without a trace of dialect: "I beg your pardon, Miss Holland. I mean that what was sufficiently good for his environment appeared adequate to him."

The girl's laughter pealed out in the cool air, and she said with an after-note of surprise: "Why, Mr. Harvey, you didn't speak like a mountain man then. I thought I was listening to a furrier."

He nodded his head and the smile died from his lips. Into his eyes came the look of steady resolve which was willing to fight for an idea.

"I just did that to show ye that I could. If I wanted to, I reckon I could talk as good English as you. I reckon yo' won't hardly hear me do it no more."

"But why?" she inquired in perplexity.

"I reckon it sounds kinder rough an' ignorant to ye, this mountain speech. Well, to me it's music. It's the language of my own people an' my own bibles. I loves it. It don't make no difference to me that it's bad grammar. Birds don't sing so sweet when yo' teachem' new tunes. To my ears the talk of down below is bard an' unnatural. I don't like the ways nor the speech of this flat country. I'll have none of it. Besides, I belongs here, an' if I didn't talk like they do my people wouldn't trust me."

Some days later the news of that night watch leaked through to Jerry Everson, who bore the tidings to Juanita, and she wrote a note to Anse Harvey asking him to come over and let her express her thanks in person.

The mail rider brought her a brief reply penned in a hand of copybook care.

I don't take any credit. I only did what any other man would do, and young Milt McBrillar did as much as I did. Thank him if you want to. It would only be awkward for me to come to you.

Respectfully, ANSE HARVEY.

Old Milt McBrillar heard of his son's part in the watchin' of the school and brooded blackly as he gnawed at the stem of his pipe, but he said nothing. The boy had been sent away to college and had had every advantage. Now he had unwittingly but none the less surely, turned his rifle on one of his father's henchlings but on his father's work, for the all-unkindling had been laid at Old Milt's command.

The thing did not tend to make the leader of the McBrillars partial to the innovations from down below.

One day, when Juanita went down to the post office, which nestled unobtrusively behind the single counter of the shack—tore at the gap, she found a letter directed in a hand which set her heart beating and revived many old memories.

She climbed to the crest, sat down under the poplar, and began to read the letter from the man she had sent away.

He said that he had made a sincere effort to reconcile himself to her decision which exiled him. The effort had failed. He had been to the Mediterranean and the East. His letter concluded:

"Can you not find it in your heart to be touched by devotion? Not only happiness, but peace, wills when you are, and I am coming to you."

The girl looked at him again and said in a soft voice: "You are always teaching me things I ought to know. Thank you."

Juanita stood as he left her and watched him striding down the slope. On his part he went back to his house, and found it suddenly dark and cheerless and unsatisfying.

Into the soul of Bad Anse Harvey had come a new element, and the prophet which was in him could see a new-moon; a necessity for curbing the grip of this new dream which might easily outgrow all his other dreams and bring torture to his heart. Here was a woman of fine fiber and delicate culture in whose eyes he might at best be an interesting barbarian. Between them lay all the impassable barriers that quarantined the tangled coves of the mountain from the valleys of the rich lowlands. Between their lives and viewpoints lay the same irreconcilable differences.

"My objective," replied Mr. Malcolm, "is a place at the headwaters of a creek called Tribulation, some thirty miles from a town called Peril."

"I know... the places—and their names fit them. I'd offer to go with you, but I'm afraid I wouldn't prove a benefit to you. I'm not bad with Bad Anse Harvey, Ezequiel, and Mr. Milton McBrillar, who are the local dictators."

Mr. Malcolm laughed.

"In passing," he said, "I dropped in to talk over the coal development proposition which you said would interest me."

Mr. Trevor reached into his desk and brought out several maps.

"The tentacles of the railroads are reaching in here and there," he began with the promoter's suave ease of manner.

"It is a region which enterprise can no longer afford to neglect, and the best field of all is as yet virgin and untouched."

"Why did you drop the enterprise yourself?" inquired his visitor.

"I didn't have the capital to swing it. Of course, if it interests you and your associates it can be put through."

Malcolm nodded. "I am going primarily by way of making a visit," he said. "I mean to go before you rouse my interest in your proposition, and it occurred to me that I might combine business with pleasure."

The promoter looked up with a shade of surprise.

"You have friends out there in that God-forsaken tangle?" he inquired. "God help them!"

FIRST AID WORK AT OLIVER PLANTS IS OF HIGH ORDER

Splendid Results are Being Achieved by C. E. Brehm There.

W MEN'S TEAM COMES FIRST

Wins Competition—August Men's Team and All of Them Make High Percentage, Company Now Has 75 Men Who Have Qualified

Lawyers' accounts are reported by Clyde F. Brehm, in charge of the first aid work of the three coal-panies of the Oliver & Smidt Steel Company, of the recent quarterly meeting held at the Oliver plant, that the work done by the coal companies in the Oliver and Southwestern Pennsylvania coal regions during the past few months have been made out more prominently than ever before the quality of the service available to any injured man at any of the mines. In this period of time, that of treating of mining cases, gashousers and all of the ordinary injuries in mining routine, the first aid team of each coal company has increased. Better treatment of these cases of injuries is afforded by making the team available to be used by the hospital corps of the Pennsylvania State Mine Safety Board, and is an offshoot of that organization. In their service, the team can be used with little bleeding, left shoulder dislocated, compound fracture of lower leg, etc. Team can treat simple fracture of right thigh, compound fracture of left arm above elbow, treat and carry 20 feet on carry board to permit the use of stretcher. Team can treat simple fracture of left collar bone, left arm, cap broken, left eye, etc. Team can treat and stretcher 100 feet.

The rate of aid, according to the 100 men's team is as follows: Team No. 1, $5.85; Team No. 2, $5.45; Team No. 3, $5.65; Team No. 4, $5.15; Team No. 5, $5.95. The men are required to tally shear in force to hold one point from the team for each minor infraction. Team No. 2 proved to be the poorest of any of the teams, and the team's name, for the poor performance.

Under the leadership of Mr. Brehm, the first aid corps has made an enviable reputation in Connellsville, Coke region circles. They have cared for all accidents at their mines for a number of years and have taken part in outside exhibitions and races and have emerged as semi-monthly meetings are held, and the quarterly held meet to name a leading team for the next period. In that most the team holding first place, has been to date, in any outside competition and has the honor of being champion of the three towns. So expert did the Oliver teams become that the company hesitated a long time before deciding that they would not be represented at the national mining congress and that aid meet being held this month at the World's Fair at San Francisco. The long journey, the large amount of money that would be required to go to the national aid meet, for the east, up Clyde F. Brehm was asked with several Pittsburgh men to be judges at the competition but press of work prevented the Oliver first aid expert from making the trip.

At Oliver, the steel company now has 75 trained men that it can call on for practical aid in time of emergency. Added to this is the first inspection of first aid work by the inspection in first aid work but who are not assigned to any one of the five teams. All the latest equipment is used by the teams in practice and in action and attention to detail that may prove large thins. In time of trouble are dwelt on at length by the instructor in the bi-weekly meetings. The system is vague in that have one man in every 17 workers a trained first aid man, and to have one member of a 60 man in heating department a regular worker in the mines and on the roads.

At the meet just closed Team No. 6, the winner of the events was composed of women, the first six originated in the coke region. Sick room practice, sanitation and nursing are the principles taught the women workers, and the success of the past year has shown that the teaching of first aid principles has proven a big asset to the company.

To become a trained first aid corps, one takes two years, one year to give the student a certificate and a year to be given at the expiration of the second year presented by the American Red Cross Society to those who pass the complete examinations. For each year an additional service, a bar of service is added to the emblem by the Red Cross Society.

IRON AND STEEL NOT ON

These Products Unfettered by West Virgin Rehearing.

Products used and made by iron and steel interests are not included in the list on which a rehearing has been granted by a referee involved in the western antitrust case.

The railroads are preparing for a formal rendering of the case, after an involved test on the merits of the proposed rate of 100 dollars a month for the first year.

The original decision of the referee, rendered in 1913, that the railroads of the Ohio and Indiana districts rates of 100 dollars a month. The referee has presented to postage commissioners the proposed rates for 90 days. If the commission will consent to receive the petition for a rehearing, the request has been granted by the commission and therefore the original decision in this case is to be upheld as a finding.
